

Location of Justice: Structures

Beacon / Bunker

Photographer Kris Graves tracks all 77 NYPD precincts from Tottenville to Edenwald, looking to these buildings — sometimes humble, sometimes imposing — for the face and footprint of law and order in the neighborhood.

Intersections

Lavender Lining

Rising rents mark the "straightening" of gayborhoods like Greenwich Village, Boystown, and the Castro. Gabrielle Esperdy asks: What role does queer presence play in cycles of urban redevelopment and displacement?

Intersections

House Proud

In a city where affordable, well-designed housing is an increasingly scarce resource for the entire population, marginalized groups such as the elderly and LGBTQ+ have an even harder time accessing it than others. David Clark Smith and Isaac Telio-Bejar take a close look at two new residential projects that attempt to address these interconnected difficulties directly through design.

Illuminated Futures

The city that never sleeps depends on 396,572 street lights. As bright white LEDs replace the familiar amber glow, what does tomorrow (night) hold?

More in Infrastructure

Explore articles on this subject in Urban Omnibus

Obstruction for Justice

How can protestors get their points across to an unyielding city? Oksana Mironova shows how gumming up the works may trump gathering in the square.

Map It and They Will Bike

The Harbor Ring would interconnect the waterfronts of Brooklyn, Staten Island, Bayonne, Jersey City, Hoboken, and Manhattan — and the Verrazano Narrows Bridge could be the missing link.